Evolution by Force Impossible: A new argument against Materialism, 35; Evolution cannot be accounted for without something beyond matter, motion, and force, 36; In the production of physical phenomena there is force, 38; The great question is what determines it, 39; The action of force cannot be determined by force, nor motion by motion, 42; It is not an act of will that decides this selection, but the determination of that act, 49; We may draw the same distinction with regard to volition, 51; The meaning of the word cause, 52; Matter cannot account for determination, 54; Determination in relation to theories of life, 57; Vital force, ib.; Darwin's selection is the same as determination, 63; Molecular motion is not explained by the persistence of force, 65; Nor by the idea of growth following the direction of least resistance, 67; Nor by the instability of the homogeneous, ib.; Nor by multiplication of effects, 68; Nor by segregation, 69; Melancholy outcome of Mr. Spencer's philosophy, 70.
